Summary

I am a businessman who found a passion for technology and decided to pursue it further. I started learning about web development on my own and eventually joined a web development community, I have been thoroughly enjoying the journey.

I love the challenge of solving complex problems and creating beautiful, functional websites and I am passionate about using technology to solve real-world problems and am excited to continue my journey in the web development field.

Experience

Frontend Developer

NaijaCodePadi

Aug 2022 - Present (1 year 5 months)

I have been contributing to an open-source project called ShareAm for over a year. The project aims to develop a web application that provides users with high-quality video and audio during screen-sharing sessions. As a contributor, I have been responsible for developing new features, fixing bugs, and improving the user interface.

During my time with the project, I have learned a lot about web development and I have also developed my skills in project management, version control, and collaboration.

One of the biggest challenges I faced was working with a large codebase and understanding how different parts of the application interacted with each other. To overcome this, I spent time reading the documentation, asking questions on the project's forum, and collaborating with other contributors.

Overall, my experience with ShareAm has been incredibly rewarding, and I look forward to continuing to contribute to the project and the open-source community.
